Circa 1781

Castle Hall is the most significant dwelling in the northern section of Caroline County, being situated on a large tract north of Goldsboro. Thomas Hardcastle constructed the house on property he acquired previously around 1781. His total holdings, equaling 1268 acres, was patented in 1791 under the name "Golden Bottom." For four generations, the Hardcastles lived at Castle Hall and were great in the service of the fellow Caroline Countians, two members serving the community as doctors.

The house, like Willow Grove and Oak Lawn is a fine Revolutionary period dwelling constructed of brick and finished in a manner comparable to the above two mentioned mansions. Castle Hall is the only one of the buildings to have developed into a telescopic form as a result of subsequent additions.

It is on the National Register of Historic ~~Sites~~ and Places.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Castle Hall is situated on the west side of Maryland Route 311 8 miles north of Goldsboro in Caroline County, Maryland.

Built by Thomas H. Hardcastle in 1781, Castle Hall is a finely preserved late Georgian house of good proportions and sophisticated detailing. The house is presently of a stepped three-part composite that, with the exception of a 1917 frame addition at one end, is built entirely of brick. It appears that the existing plan dates from about 1800 when the main block was connected to a two-story detached kitchen by the addition of a two-story section between the two buildings.

The original 1781 house is the largest of the three parts and stands at the northeast end. Its very handsome principal facade has on the first floor, a centered entrance door flanked by four windows of nine-over-nine sash and on the second floor five nine-over-nine sash windows that correspond in placement to these openings below. Four windows of the first floor have masonry flat arches, incised to resemble radiating cut stone blocks. Centered on each is a molded keystone. The five windows of the second floor, the tops of which are flush with the bed molding of the roof cornice, are without ornament. The enframing of the entrance door is rather unattractive and consists of wide unornamented pilasters supporting a narrow cornice with small modillion blocks. This enframing was probably installed in the early to mid-nineteenth century, or later. The eave cornice of the gable is boxed and decorated with carved modillion blocks and fretwork. At each end of the roof ridge there is a single flush gable chimney. On both the front and rear roof slopes are two oversized, hipped-roofed dormers that were added to the house about 1930.

In addition to the masonry lintels of the first floor windows on this elevation there are two other features worthy of note. One is that the front elevation is of all header bond up to a three-course brick band between the first and second floor windows and then changes to Flemish bond above this level. The third and possibly unique feature is a one-story pedimented, Chinese Chippendale-style porch sheltering the front entrance. The roof of the porch has flared eaves and latticed-patterned boards in the tympanum of the pediment. Centered in the tympanum is a flush panel of horizontal boards framed by applied moldings that resembles a pedimented or pointed arched doorway. The porch is supported by four tapered columns of the Doric order at the front and two tapered half columns at the rear. The posts are seated on a raised wood platform fronted by a single flight of wood steps.

The northeast end of Castle Hall has been stuccoed over, this having been done at an undetermined time. There is one window in the gable. Near the gable peak is a round date plaque framed by a raised surround with four molded keystones. The plaque reads: T H H 1781. The Flemish bond northwest elevation is five bays in width and repeats the basic treatment of the front. The roof cornice, however, lacks the modillion blocks and fretwork of the facade and the entrance is without decoration or porch. The three course brick belt of the front continues around the northeast and northwest sides but does not appear on the southwest end. It may have been removed when additions were to this end of the house.

On the southwest end of the house stands a series of graduated, two-story brick and frame wings. The two parts of this wing closest to the main block are of brick, common bond construction and, as previously discussed, are made up of a once detached or semi-detached kitchen that was joined to the main block in about 1800 by a two-story "filler" addition¹. Both sections have flat arches, once ornamented over the first floor windows by keystones. On the southeast end of the lower brick section is a two-story frame addition built about 1900. According to H. Chandlee Forman, this addition replaced an earlier one-story brick section. If this brick fourth section actually existed, Castle Hall, through a process of evolution, attained a four-part telescopic plan thought to be unique in Maryland.²

Unfortunately, due to the ill health of the owners, access to only two interior rooms was gained for the purpose of this record. These two rooms were the stair hall and south first-floor chamber. Both rooms have paneled wainscoting and molded cornices. The south room has a fireplace with a molded surround and paneled overmantel in the north corner and a glazed cupboard of generous proportions in the east corner. The stair in the hall rises in a series of winders to the second floor and has carved stepends, a molded rail and square balusters. The balustrade terminates at the foot of the stairs in a spiral grouping of square balusters in the center of which is a slender, delicately turned post. As nearly as could be determined the interior of the house remains in an excellent state of preservation.

In close proximity to the rear of the house is a one-story gable roofed smokehouse of a probable early nineteenth century date of construction.

In this publication Forman suggests that the "filler" additions of circa 1800 replaced a former colonnade joining the main block to the kitchen. A one-story area of brickwork on the rear wall of the center position that is contemporary to the kitchen and main block substantiates Forman's theory that the colonnade connecting the two 1781 buildings had, like Oak Lawn (1783) in the same county, one unbroken wall of brick and one open, the latter on the southeast side.

SPECIFIC DATES 1781 and circa 1800 BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Castle Hall was built by Thomas Hardcastle of Caroline County in 1781. A prominent member of a family active in many county and state affairs, he built a house commensurate with his social position. Castle Hall is thus not only a large house solidly built of brick, but it is also a well-proportioned and finely detailed structure. The decorative changes in the bond of the brickwork, the masonry lintels over the first floor windows, and the Chippendale porch, all on the main facade, are details which give an appearance of elegance. The unusually large size of the kitchen wing, at one time detached or connected to the main block by a colonnade (see description), is a further reflection of Hardcastle's wealth.

Another possible explanation of the fine detailing of Castle Hall's front facade may be guessed at from the statement in the 1920 Caroline County history that Thomas Hardcastle was a "master builder."¹ If this is so, the well-laid brickwork and other details could be the consequence of this. Hardcastle was also a planter, however, as he is labeled in the deeds as "Gentleman."

Thomas Hardcastle was the son of Robert Hardcastle who came to Maryland from England in 1748. Although he received considerable acreage at his father's death, he did not build Castle Hall on his inherited land. Rather, between 1778 and 1783, he amassed 1268-1/2 acres which he resurveyed (1791) and named "Golden Bottom."² The extent of Hardcastle's estate made him one of Maryland's largest landholders in the mid-1780's.³

Thomas Hardcastle was an active participant in local affairs during the Revolutionary era and the several decades following. During the Revolution, he was a member of the Caroline County Committee of Safety, the body empowered to raise troops in the county. In 1776 he was elected, by ballot, to be the quartermaster of the West Battalion of the Caroline County troops. He and three others were appointed by the county court in 1777 to determine a place of meeting for that body. He served as a Justice of the Peace and as a justice of the county court, and in 1788 he was appointed one of the trustees to establish a county almshouse.

In 1756 Hardcastle (1736-1808) married Henrietta Downes (1739-1812) and they had two daughters and ten sons born between 1757 and 1786. William Molleson Hardcastle (1779-1874), the third youngest child, inherited Castle Hall at his father's death in 1808. He, in turn, deeded it to his son Alexander in 1864 in "consideration of natural love and affection" plus $200 annually for himself and his wife and a room reserved "at the Mansion for their natural lives." The property is described in this deed as "all that farm situated in the Upper election District of Caroline County...[on] which the said William M. Hardcastle now resides, formerly known as 'Golden Bottom' but now commonly called the 'Castle Hall Farm'...."⁴

William M. and Alexander Hardcastle continued the family tradition of public service. The former was elected eleven times to the Maryland Assembly, and the latter practiced medicine in the county; first at Castle Hall and then after 1881 in Denton, where he died in 1911. Dr. Hardcastle served two terms in the Maryland General Assembly and was the Director of the Chesapeake and Delaware Railroad. He was educated at Castle Hall School and the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia. The Castle Hall School, established on part of "Golden Bottom" designed for this purpose, was operated as a semi-private school for the white children in the area until 1898 when it became a school for blacks.

The Hardcastle family graveyard remains on the Castle Hall property 1000 feet to the west of the house. Now overgrown, it still contains the graves of Thomas and Henrietta Hardcastle, builders of Castle Hall.

Acreage-----approximately 210 acres

Acreage justification

The boundaries as marked on the map include 210 acres. There are several buildings on this property in addition to Castle Hall. The only other historically interesting one is the smokehouse immediately behind the house. There is a tenant house on the edge of the property on Route 311 and a barn behind the house. The Hardcastle family cemetery is also included in this acreage. The property surrounding Castle Hall is presently farmed and the land is flat here. The number of acres was selected to protect the rural environment of a house that was built by a family made wealthy through their farming activities.
